The Armstrong Gun. The London Times, in describing the extraordinary preparations going forward at the Woolwich arsenal. gives the following facts in relation to the celebrated Armstrong gun, which have never before been made public :-Each gun is made in about three feet lengths, and on much the same principle as the twisted gun barrels .-Thin bars of the best wrought iron, about two inches broad are heated to a white heat, and in this state twisted and welded together in spiral rolls round a steel bar or core, smaller in diameter than the bore of the gun.-Over this, when cold, another twist of the same kind is made with the spiral running in a contrary direction, and so on, until three or four layers have been put on, according to the calibre of the gun and the thickness required. The whole is then reheated and welded together for the last time under the steam hammer. The edges somebody gives us the outside dog in the fight, in the col- of the three feet lengths are next planed down so as to admit their joining and lapping over, and over these edges are forced on thick wrought iron rings, which, being welded down to a white heat, of course contract so as to make the joint almost stronger than if made in one piece. In the breech an opening is cut down into the chamber ; but the breech itself is separate from the gun, and is worked backwards by a powerful screw. When the gun is to be loaded, the breech is worked back and a wedge shaped piece, fitting into the opening of the gun, litted out, but not to admit the charge, which is pushed forward with a ramrod at the back, working through the large screw in which the breech turns into the chamber, where the rifling begins. The wedge is then replaced, the breech screwed close by a single turn of a lever handle, and the gun fired. The operation of loading and firing can be performed, we believe, three times in one minute.

Apart from the simple but effective mechanism of the breech the great merit of this guns consists in the manner in which it is formed in spirals of metal bands, which give it such an enormous increase of strength that one-half the thickness of iron can be dispensed with .-Thus an ordinary long 32-pounder weighs 57 cwt., and requires 10 lbs. of power to throw a ball to its utmost We decidedly agree with the Evening Gazette poet, effective range, 3,000 yards. Sir W. Armstrong's 32pounder only weighs 26 cwt., and a charge of 5 lbs. of powder throws its shot 516 miles, or nearly 10,000 yards. remarks in his journal, after having read one of Scott's In a 32-pounder of this latter kind there are no less than productions, "Glorious fellow, Scott! > Thus, when the cartridge is ignited the ball is forced forward from the chamber into the narrow bore, which it fills so closely, being actually too large for it, that there is no windage whatever, and every portion of the explosive force is applied to projecting the ball. I'he gun on which the Government experimented for months at S. oeburyness before adopting it, was actually fired 3,500 times, and yet is now as serviceable as the day it left the foundry. So perfect is the weapon as to accuracy that it is said that at 4,000 yards a target 10 feet square could be hit 90 times out of 100 by a good artilleryman.

as to leave about one-tenth of an inch to fit the rifling.

Translated for the North American & U. S. Gazette. THE WINE TREASURES OF BREMEN .- No city in the world can boast of possessing a greater or more costly treasure in the form of wine, than Bremen. The Bremen Town Hall cellar is famous all over the world, were it only by the light that Hauff's imagination has thrown over the subterranean premises. The traveler whose route leads to Bremen will seldom fail to visit it, for it contains the oldest Rhenish wines extant, and here the Twelve Apostles, with Judas Iscariot strangely placed at their head, have, for more than two centuries, dealt out the choicest of Hock and Johannisberg. The patriarch among the contents of the capacious cellar, where in former days the East India captains used to lay their accounts before their ship-owners, is the Rose Wine .-As a sign of its value and superior dignity, it is kept apart in a separate cabinet, surmounted by a rose, and the door of the inclosure can be opened only by official

In the year 1624, six pipes of Johannisberg, and an equal quantity of Hock, were placed here by the magisyearly distribute a small quantity, either in presents, or for the use of the sick, by order of a physician; the supply being gratuitous to the poor, and at the cost of five thalers (of cents seventy-eight) a bottle to those able to pay. To the citizen of Bremen alone, is reserved the privilege of introducing a distinguished stranger into this sanctum, and after special permission granted, he may (at the proper cost) entertain his guest with a bottle of the precious beverage. What is thus lost by annual consumption, is replaced from casks of the vintage next in date.

The value of the wine consists chiefly in its age. A pipe of it in 1624 cost 300 thalers; estimating the interest of the capital at 5 per cent., and the necessary current expenses at an additional 5 per cent., the capital at compound interest would double itself in seven years, and thus, in the year 1858, each pipe of the Rose wine represented a value of 1,714,980 millions 441,413 thalers, and allowing 1,320 bottles to a pipe, each bottle is worth 1299 millions 227,607 thalers. A bottle contains 8 glasses, each one of which costs 162,403,450 thalers. and the drop which is spilled or left in the glass, computing it to hold a thousand, costs 162,4031/3 thalers. The people of Bremen are fond of their treasure, and it was a high mark of their esteem when the magistrates, at the suggestion of their counsellor, Dr. Meyer, presented Goethe with several bottles on his birthday, in FREAKS OF LIGHTNING .- The sharp lightning in the 1823, after his recovery from a severe illness. Goethe thunder storm of Saturday morning, as we said at the knew how to appreciate the honor and the value of the time, "struck somewhere." We learn that Mr. Tildsley gift; he delayed the enjoyment of it, postponing it until Graham, of Norfolk county, was passing along the October, when the Diet met at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Buzzard's Neck road, about four miles from town, with and his old friend Count Reinhard, the French ambassador, helped him to empty the first bottle.

The Empress Regent Eugenie's first decree proroguing the Legislative body finishes thus:— Done at the Council of Ministers, at the Palace of the Tu illeries, May 17, 1859, for the Emperor, and in virtue of the powers which he has confided to us. EUGENIE.

By the Empress Regent. ACHILLE FOULD, Minister of State. The paper was rose color, her initials, "E. B." in German text was stamped on the corner, and the whole fragrant with the perfume manufactured by Guerlain, and called "Zephyre de la Regente."

ENGLAND AND THE WAR .- The British government es, shows an aggregate of forty-one vessels, of which state that: "Foreign ships in British ports will be held in the same penalties for a breach of the neutrality and two were steamboats. The total value of property law of the country as British ships." This is an imporlost was one million two hundred and sixteen thousand tant point to all interested in American shipping.
